Haddawi honored by state organization

Dr. Rajih Haddawi, who helped create Volunteers in Medicine in Bloomington in the spring of 2007, will receive the Indiana State Medical Association Community Service Award at the organization's convention on Sept. 22 in Indianapolis.

Haddawi was chosen by a committee of his peers who reviewed nominees from across the state and selected him for spearheading and supporting Volunteers in Medicine of Monroe County. He is the first-ever Monroe County physician to receive the award, and was nominated without his knowledge by colleagues and supporters who have worked with him to see VIM become a reality.

The Monroe Owen County Medical Society will honor Haddawi Sept. 15 at the society's semiannual general meeting at the Bloomington Country Club.
